

"The Battle Cry of Peace."

"The Battle Cry of Peace" is an argument, not for preparation for war, but for preparation against war. Commodore J. Stuart Blackton has taken the facts as supplied by Hudson Maxim, and has presented them, not in dry tabulation, but in the form of a thrilling story told in motion pictures and with the facts themselves illustrated in definite examples.

As the "movie fan" watches this big story told in five parts and eight reels his memory will be refreshed in certain particulars and he will learn many things that have escaped his attention. Incidentally, he will be able to clarify his opinions and come to a definite understanding of what it means to be an American and what his country really demands of him.

The story portion of "The Battle Cry of Peace" is an absorbing tale of what happened in Belgium and, under certain conditions, what could happen here.

Cities overwhelmed, families separated or subjected to unspeakable atrocities, the underhand work of spies and many other evils that the world has forced upon its attention within the last year are depicted with dramatic intensity.

The story is so well told and so well acted by an excellent company that it cannot fail to make a deep and lasting impression. Charles Richmond, Norma Talmadge, Mary Maurice and James Morrison were only a few in the big cast, but with these four several scenes of deep pathos were superbly acted.

In addition there are enormous crowds employed in the battle scenes and in the pictures of everyday life.

The audience travels in an aeroplane, goes to sea with the fleet, shares the life of the city, goes through Coney Island, and has more adventures in a single evening than some folks have in their whole lifetime.

Then they learn to just what extent we are unprepared for war and what means are being taken to overcome that unpreparedness.

If certain treacherable tendencies in present day America are crushed, as they deserve to be, "The Battle Cry of Peace" will have had a valuable share in doing it.

"The Battle Cry of Peace" will be shown at the Opera House on June 12, 13 and 14 for the small price of 25 cents.

AGAIN VERDUN STRUGGLE GROWS MORE DESPERATE

Germans Recapture Portion of Fort Douaumont Lost to French Attacks.

Under a rain of shot and shell which inflicted enormous losses, the Germans have again taken Fort Douaumont, northeast of Verdun, from the French. As though to even the score somewhat, however, the French in spirited counterattacks northwest of Verdun recaptured from the Germans trenches on the southern outskirts of the village of Cumieres which the Germans had occupied in the late fighting, and also stopped with their artillery several attempts of the Germans to debouch from the village. The fighting around Fort Douaumont was furious, the Germans launching attack after attack against the fort, employing among other two fresh divisions of Bavarians. Several times the attacks were put down with heavy losses, but finally the Germans succeeded in reoccupying the point of vantage which they had held virtually since the commencement of the Verdun offensive until the French drove them out several days ago. The French still retain the immediate approaches to the fort.

On the Austro-Italian front the Austrians from the Lake Garda region to the Val Sugana district are keeping up the violent offensive against the Italians. Driven across their border southeast of Trent, the Italians are endeavoring to hold a fortified line from Asiago to Arsiero and the heights east of the Val d'Assa. Rome admits that in effecting their retreat across the border the Italians destroyed artillery which it was impossible to withdraw.

As an outgrowth of recent talk of peace, Sir Edward Grey has reiterated in the house of commons that the time is not yet ripe for peace. It was the duty of diplomacy to maintain the solidarity of the entente allies, he said, until a stage of the war had been reached where the prospect of maintaining an enduring peace would be within the allies.

The American note to Great Britain and France reiterating, though more strongly than in the previous note, the government's protests against the seizure and detention of legitimate mail matter bound to and from the United States has been handed to the British and French ambassadors at Washington.

MRS. HAWES

Editor The Herald and News:

I closed you will find the obituary notice of the death of Mrs. W. A. Hawes of Charlottesville, Va. As a girl she was a regular visitor to the Confederate hospitals, married a Confederate soldier. A great church worker and in latter life a great sufferer. The few days I spent in her splendid home will ever be remembered as among the most pleasant of life.

Respectfully,
W. G. Peterson.

Mrs. Hawes died in Charlottesville, Va., her native city, on the 30th of October, 1915.

It seems late to postpone giving the public a brief sketch of her life. But she was so rare a woman that it was felt to be a thing impossible, to give any fitting representation of what a power she has been in her church and through that in the world, quiet and retired as she was; veritably one of those "whose works do follow them."

The Sinclair family from whom Virginia Lucretia sprung originally French and spelled St. Clere, had followed William the conqueror to England, emigrated to Scotland, and belonged to Clan Caithness at the time the young pretender, Charles Edward,

SPENT $600 IN YEAR IN HUNT FOR RELIEF

FATHER TELLS OF TERRIBLE SUFFERING HIS DAUGHTER ENDURED

ALL TREATMENT FAILED

Says She Had 200 Convulsions—Tanlac Almost Restored Health in Two Weeks.

Just two and a half bottles of Tanlac have banished in three (3) weeks the stomach trouble with which Mrs. Mary G. Kernels, of 16 Hammett St., Anderson, S. C., suffered and which during the preceding eleven (11) months had caused her to have at least two hundred (200) convulsions, said her father, G. W. Hale, of 18 Hammett St., Anderson.

Mr. Hale said he, with others, had laid out Mrs. Kernels' body at least two hundred (200) times during the past eleven (11) months, each time thinking her dead. "I hoped she really was dead," he said, "so she would not have to longer endure that awful suffering."

Mr. Hale's statement follows, and it is one of the most remarkable that has yet come to the attention of the Tanlac representative:

"For five years my daughter, Mrs. Mary G. Kernels, suffered after eating the most severe attacks of indigestion. We had tried every way to find relief for her suffering, but without success. She had even been under the knife at a hospital. During the past year we spent at least six hundred (600) dollars for doctors' bills for her, but Tanlac was the only medicine which gave her relief. Tanlac is the greatest medicine on earth."

"Her suffering was so intense and so terrible that it caused her to go into a kind of convulsion. We had laid her out, thinking she was dead at least two hundred (200) times in the past eleven months. Scores of times when she was laid out, I hoped she really was dead, so she would not have to longer endure that awful suffering."

"But, she was relieved in just two (2) weeks by Tanlac, and now, fifteen (15) days after she began taking it, she is up and goes out visiting, though she had been confined to her bed six (6) weeks before she began taking Tanlac."

Mrs. Kernels, who lives at 16 Hammett St., said: "I suffered from chronic stomach trouble, and steadily became worse despite all treatment. Last summer I was twice operated on without gaining relief. I was told my case was hopeless, but I began taking Tanlac and the very first dose decreased the intensity of those awful attacks which followed each meal. I have taken two and a half (2 1/2) bottles of Tanlac, and have gained ten (10) pounds in weight. I am doing my housework now, and do not suffer those attacks."

Mrs. Kernels' father and his wife, her husband and a neighbor were present during these conversations. Evans' Pharmacy, Anderson, will please to answer any inquiries regarding the above statements.

was defeated at the battle of Culoden, in 1746, and John Sinclair, with the Douglasses, Shepherds and MacDonalds, with many other adherents of the Stuarts, preferring exile to compromise of principle, took refuge in North America.

George Sinclair belonged to the fourth generation of his family, who called America home, and the maiden name of his wife was Ruth Ann Belt, whose family was of similar genealogy; namely, Alfred Belt, son of Carlton Belt, son of Higginson Belt, and were people of consideration in their new abode.

Virginia was the sixth child of these worthy parents, who first settling in Loudon county, Virginia, removed to Albermarle in 1836, and purchased from Dr. Merriweather the place known as Locust Grove, which had been previously owned by the Lewises, together with land enough attached to make farming profitable.

Virginia early attended school at the Piedmont Institute. She afterwards pursued her education in the Albemarle Female Institute, and later at Hollins, of which Professor Charles L. Cocke was principal in her day, and she matured into a lovely woman, as, happily, her photograph, still preserved, attests. In 1859 Dr. John A. Broadus married her elder sister, Charlotte, and took a great interest in further stimulating the thirst for knowledge and religious aspirations of the studious young girl, whose intelligence struck him as of a high type.

Popular as a Girl.

She had already become a member of the Episcopal church, and was an ardent and acceptable teacher in its Sabbath school. As a young girl she had affable manners, and was generally liked, but her intimate friends were few and select.

Suffered Bereavements Many.

In November, 1868, she was married to the late Dr. Walker Aylett Hawes, of King William county, Virginia, a graduate of the school of medicine in the University of Virginia. Dr. Hawes took his bride home to his native county, and there commenced the practice of his profession; but, after three years, he removed to New York city, where he continued in practice for thirty-five years.

In 1879, when they had already lost their eldest son, a severe epidemic of diphtheria swept through New York bereaving them of another son and daughter. One little girl survived the disease.

Mrs. Hawes, as soon after her arrival as possible, resumed church membership, this time in the Baptist church of the Epiphany, Madison avenue and sixty-fourth street. She was a constant attendant upon its services, taught diligently in the Sunday school, and, making many friends among the congregation, was soon recognized as a zealous Christian. In the spring of 1897, six years after the venerable church completed its century, the trustees recognized that finances were not in a flourishing condition. Some of its staunchest members had died, others had moved away, the faithful trustees, few in number, feeling the financial burden too heavy for them, called a church meeting and announced to the assembled membership that they could see no way out of the difficulty but by selling their valuable building and lot, paying the indebtedness, and themselves transferring their membership to other Baptist churches. After several official members had spoken in the same despondent tone, a gentle woman's voice was heard, and Mrs. Hawes arose, and asked if she might be permitted to propose a plan.

She said it was clear to her that there was need for preaching in that very place, and she asked if the trustees would consent for her to rent the church for the summer just begun, and try the plan for a brief term at least, instead of resigning so supinely sacred associations. The trustees expressed their regret, but did not feel equal to assuming the financial obligations. Mrs. Hawes modestly but firmly represented that if they would part herself. They finally assented, and she forthwith began her task. The pastor having already left, she wrote to a talented young minister of a church in Kentucky, asking him to be her guest and take the pulpit for his vacation, to which he cordially agreed. Sexton, choir, organist and all the concomitants of a well organized place of worship arranged for in orderly manner; advertisement made that Epiphany church would be opened during the whole summer, and Mr. Howard Lee Jones was announced as preacher.
